

No Small Change

Helping you develop small groups that will transform your people & your church

Let's talk assimilation. Sometimes a great small group will bring about wonderful relationships with new people who have never before thought about coming to your church. Maybe you will attract people from your workplace to your small group, individuals who may not want to come to church, but are interested in belonging to a group. How do you transfer those relationships from the small group setting to full church participation? Do you have a strategy? What does your church have to offer to those you have targeted with your small group? As leaders, we have to be intentional about planning a strategy for connecting the people in our small groups to our body of believers.

What is the strategy? It will differ for each of you. Every person is different and has different strengths. Find your strength and your passion in ministry and use that to connect people to the body of Christ in your town. Find something that they need and find out what strength your church has to offer that might meet that need. Proverbs 29:18 says, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Stop and think about the vision you have for your small group. Everyone is looking for a place to belong, everyone wants to feel accepted, everyone has needs unmet. When you meet that need, you will connect them to your body of believers.

Sarah MacKinney
AGK Connection Consultant